Pittenween is a fishing centre of some importance on the Firth of Clyde, and a considerable trade is done there in fish curing. The town was created a royal burgh in 1537, and from then until 1639 it was a prosperous place. It was here that the robbery was committed upon the excise collector, which was the cause of the Porteous riots.

St Monans, or Abercrombie as it is often known, is a small town of about 2,000 inhabitants on the Firth of Forth. There is a good harbour here, which is the headquarters of two or three trading vessels and a small fishing fleet. The town is easily accessible from Edinburgh, and a favourite week-end resort.
